ASSET & SECTOR ALLOCATION (% OF NAV)

FUND MANAGER'S REPORT

China and Hong Kong equity markets experienced divergence in October, reflecting heightened geopolitical tensions and sector-specific rotations. The Hang Seng Index (HSI) declined 3.5%, the Hang Seng China Enterprises Index (HSCEI) fell 4.1%, and the Hang Seng TECH Index (HSTECH) dropped 8.6% amid profit-taking in major technology names. In contrast, the Hang Seng Mainland Banks Index (HSMBI) gained 5.3%, supported by resilient earnings and attractive dividend yields from large state-owned banks.

Market sentiment was dampened early in the month after Beijing expanded its export licensing regime on October 9, adding more rare-earth elements, magnet alloys, and related know-how under national security grounds. The move prompted U.S. warnings of potential retaliatory tariffs. However, equities rebounded toward month-end after a temporary trade truce was reached at the Busan Summit on October 30, where both countries agreed to suspend new tariffs and export restrictions for one year while resuming agricultural trade.

Meanwhile, Beijing issued new guidelines mandating that state-funded data centers use domestically produced AI chips, reinforcing China's long-term commitment to technological self-sufficiency.

With Q3 GDP growth of +1.1% QoQ and +4.8% YoY, China's economy remains on a stable footing despite external headwinds. We maintain a constructive outlook on Chinese and Hong Kong equities, supported by favorable policy direction, attractive valuations, and accelerating AI-driven innovation, these markets continue to offer compelling long-term investment opportunities.
