FUND MANAGER'S REPORT

U.S. financial markets advanced in January, with the Dow Jones up 4.7%, S&P 500 rising 2.7%, and Nasdaq gaining 1.6%. Strength in cyclical sectors and easing concerns over Federal Reserve policy supported the rally, while a rotation away from tech stocks led to mixed sector performance.

Key developments included President Trump rescinding 78 executive orders from the Biden administration, signaling regulatory shifts. Additionally, the Biden administration imposed new restrictions on Nvidia AI chip exports, impacting the semiconductor sector. Trade tariff concerns continued to weigh on emerging markets, particularly in Asia.

The U.S. dollar index dipped 0.1% to 108.4, offering slight relief to global markets, while Brent crude oil rose 2.8% to $76.8 per barrel amid supply concerns from Russian oil sanctions.

Despite these gains, investors remain cautious about Trump's protectionist policies and their impact on global supply chains. Shifting capital flows indicate a search for opportunities outside the U.S. as markets adjust to evolving fiscal and monetary policies. While GDP growth remains steady and inflation moderates, elevated equity valuations suggest potential for increased volatility ahead.
